Interstitial cystitis (IC) and bladder pain syndrome (BPS) are chronic inflammatory conditions of the urinary bladder. While these two syndromes share certain clinical features, such as inflammation, dysuria, and recurrent urinary tract infections, their pathophysiology is likely to be quite different. The aim of this article is to review the current understanding of the pathogenesis of IC and BPS and to identify possible causes for differences in their presentation. Current evidence indicates that IC/BPS is a diagnosis of exclusion, with the potential to be the result of an underlying process such as pelvic floor dysfunction, a trigger of inflammation, and or a synergy of these two factors. There is also evidence that steroid treatment for urologic conditions can potentially cause or exacerbate IC/BPS symptoms.Q: UITableView with multiple sections using Storyboard/Cocoa I am using Xcode 4.3 and developing a new iOS app. For the first time, I am using the Storyboard editor to design an app. I wish to use a TableView as the primary interface, but I need it to be scrollable and have multiple sections. But the Storyboard Editor seems to only support one section, and I can't seem to change it to support multiple sections in Interface Builder. How can I do this? A: The current documentation on Interface Builder doesn't clearly explain how you do this: Note: The implementation of sections in the table view controller design template is not well-documented. The following is known to work: Start by using the navigation bar in the first row of the table view controller to create a navigation bar. Add a new section to the table view controller by choosing the navigation bar in the first row and clicking the "Add" button

When I run my project on my home machine, it's about a 15-30 minute 'debug and build cycle' to see a running and functional program. At my work I sometimes have a minuscule amount of memory and running on a larger machine gives my the same result. When I work on a program I often will'refresh' to see if I've made any changes that didn't show up yet. I don't think that Eclipse will run on my home machine if I just close it and restart it, nor would it run on my work machine. Is there any setting that allows me to run the Eclipse IDE or part of it (from Eclipse) but not to actually start the Eclipse IDE/part of it (without starting the IDE)? I'm not sure what to call this, so let me just call it a remote server - meaning I'd like to run a server on my home machine but not have to start it while I am away from my work machine. That way I can make changes and then check them out and I can run on my work machine. I saw this article: But I am not sure where in Eclipse to put this code and the article is not very specific.
