A layer-based editing system enables raster image creation and altering with multiple overlays that support transparency. The Basics of Photoshop Photoshop may be powerful, but it isn't the only image editing program. So what is a "layer"? And how is it different than other software? Photoshop has layers, but they work somewhat differently than layers in other programs. In Photoshop, a layer contains a bitmap representation of an image. It is a complete snapshot of the image. A layer can be loaded with any image on your hard drive that you have selected as a background. When you import an image, its layers become layers in the open Photoshop document. You can create new layers by pressing the New Layer icon. This creates a single layer in the image, called a new layer. When you import an image, its layers become layers in the open Photoshop document. The Import Function Each new layer begins as a white layer with a black canvas background and simply holds the image of the background. To import an image, click the Import button on the Layers panel. This opens the Import Files dialog box and displays the open files in the Computer File Browser. Select the image you want to add, and click Open. Photoshop adds the image as a background. In the Preview panel, you can see the newly imported image as well as the background. To see all the layers in your image, click the eye icon beside the layer name. It turns green when it is over the image; the eye icon is replaced by a pin when the layer is not visible. To import an image, click the Import button on the Layers panel. This opens the Import Files dialog box and displays the open files in the Computer File Browser. Most image programs also use the Import feature, but Photoshop's unique set of features makes it the premier tool for importing images. Instead of copying individual pixels, Photoshop chooses the exact coordinates where each pixel will appear and instantly replaces it with the image you imported. Photoshop creates the mask from the imported image and all other layers. A Gradient A Gradient is a tinting and blending of colors within an image. A Gradient can be set up to create a color gradient, or it can be used to create interesting effects. You can add a Gradient from the Gradient palette (Window > Gradient), or you can use the Brush tool to apply Gradient or Solid color directly

Wongle Wongle is a German company headquartered in Suhl. It produces high-pressure sodium lamps and is a major supplier of traffic lighting and commercial applications in the USA, the Republic of Ireland, Germany and the United Kingdom. It is a subsidiary of the Licht AG group and is associated with other major lighting company DORA. History The company was founded in 1949 as a manufacturer of gas-discharge lamps. The company was originally founded as a motorcycle lamp manufacturer, and was later expanded to incorporate traffic lighting. During the 1960s and 1970s, it made a large investment in manufacturing capacity of high-pressure sodium lamps. Wongle has also invested in the manufacture of industrial lighting and has launched or acquired several lighting technologies to this end. In 1992, it launched its first generation LED traffic lighting lamp (LG-ST), having then already developed its own LED technology and manufactured its own LEDs. In 2009, it acquired the French manufacturer of traffic lights for €20 million, to diversify its product range. In 2010, it launched its first LED street light, the Belltech D40 LED. In 2015, it launched its second LED technology, the LEDiLIT SOLID. This has become the main product of the company. The company now claims to be the world's largest provider of LED street lighting. Since the Licht AG group acquired the company in 2016, Wongle has become a member of the Licht AG group, and is now part of the Licht Phototechnik division. Products The major product range of Wongle is LED street lighting lamps, although it also produces high-pressure sodium lamps. In 2017, there were almost one billion street lamps operating on the roads of Europe. This percentage is expected to remain stable in the coming years, even though the market for these products is expected to stagnate, due to the introduction of ultra-high-pressure (UHP) xenon lamps. Wongle's LED lamps are currently used in over 190 countries around the world. The influence of normal grey matter atrophy on hippocampal volume in AD. The hippocampus is clearly affected in Alzheimer's disease (AD) and the atrophy is considered to be a diagnostic marker. However, the association between hippocampal atrophy and normal ageing is still unknown. We investigated normal age-related hippocampal atrophy and its relation to the entire cortex and cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) volume in a group of elderly healthy subjects. Magnetic resonance images of 73 healthy right-handed volunteers (mean age 67.4+/-7.4 years, range 50-79 years) were analysed using a voxel-based method. The medial, lateral and posterior part of the hippocampus was selected as a region of interest and normalized on an analysis of variance (ANOVA) for group comparison. The whole brain cortical (left + right)/(left + right + posterior + anterior) volume was determined as a covariate. The ANOVA analysis showed a significant age related atrophy rate for the right hippocampal volume. Furthermore, the total grey matter volume of the whole brain as well as the CSF volume were positively correlated to the left + right hippocampal volume. No correlation with the volume of the individual subfields of the hippocampus was found. However, the posterior hippocampal subfield showed a positive correlation with the total grey matter volume in this group. The age-related atrophy rate for the right hippocampal subfield as well as the total grey matter volume was negatively correlated with the CSF volume. The present data showed that the presence of normal age-related normal grey matter atrophy is associated with a reduced volume of the entire hippocampus. The present findings indicate that normal age-related atrophy of the whole grey matter is related to a relative enlargement of the right hippocampus. Study of the ligand-induced conformational change in the MHC molecules. We have studied the conformational changes in rat Ia (RT1a) and H-2Kb molecules during ligand-induced dissociation in fluorescence experiments. In the RT1a molecules, the dissociation rate is about 3-fold faster at pH 5 than at pH 7, while the dissociation rates of H-2Kb molecules are almost independent of pH. From the kinetic analysis of the dissociation, we concluded that the RT1a molecules do not have two distinct binding sites on the molecules, and that the charge state of the H-2Kb molecule is not an important factor for the ligand-
