A high-stakes game of survival, Quantum Conscience puts players in a world where three million people have disappeared. Nothing is as it seems. In this non-traditional first-person experience, players can interact with other characters, view their thoughts and discover their plans, using unique powers, such as telekinesis and real-time navigation. Full reviews, interviews and more at “We get to see what it’s like to be a black person in the world. It’s definitely something that’s not normally in vogue for most people.” If you’ve ever wanted to be a part of an indie game project; if you’re a developer, writer, graphic artist, musician or have any other creative profession at heart then read on. Your name is behind this project and you’ve been asked to join a pre-alpha stage project called Quantum Conscience, a sci-fi adventure game, available on Steam, but built in the Unity game engine. We’ve also set up a Facebook page, here, to have direct access to you, so that you can keep up to date with Quantum Conscience news and events and to get in touch with you directly. You can also follow the live development on Twitter or subscribe to our newsletter which regularly updates us with the latest news and press releases. Game is still in pre-alpha stage and not a beta build at this stage, but will be finished in 2 weeks time. Quantum Conscience: Are you a developer, writer, painter, illustrator or musician? If so, then you can join the Quantum Conscience team at any time and contribute to the development of the project. We are looking for artists who can create interesting original assets for the project as well as programmers, designers and developers with knowledge of C# and Unity who can help out with the code. There will be some free content for the game, but if you’re willing to contribute we are willing to pay you for your work in our token game shop. If this sounds like the sort of game you’d like to be involved with, then contact us via hello@quantumconscience.com We are looking for a few really talented people to join the game. ### What's new:

"Logical" (as in "Die-hard" American Football) is an independent promoter from Vlissingen (NL). He's putting on a 120 pound catchweight fight this Saturday, October 24th at the Waasland Arena in Leuven, Belgium. He's already gotten a lot of interest from a number of European promoters and prospects, so it should be a lot of fun! Beginner Series3 EYE Beginner Series has this week released a new weekly web show. This time, they're following up on the great article they did earlier this summer on the indy scene in the UK. They're also doing an inventory, or an inventory if you ask me, of beginner-style boxers across the pond. 10.11.08

12:53 AM "Esther's" (Esther Paul) first impression of Westside Promotions can be viewed below. They were very helpful when we did our presentation at their seminar. They sent us info in time, etc, etc. Seriously, would LOVE to do some business with them. I know a lot of other people are similarly inclined. Imagine the following conversation happening in heaven: "Well, God, you were wrong. We didn't have enough time. I have finished my project and it met your specifications." I guess what I want to mention is this: if you send me your advertisement, I'll read it. I will. I will definitely read it. However...I will probably delete it. It's that simple. It feels like sending your phone number to the public in this day and age is the same as a public confession and a guarantee of your soul-destiny. It's better just to keep your private life private. The public will just write "I'm a Libra, I'll be happy to go to her house for a drink," and never hear from her again. Or, "I'm a Leo, she's a Virgo, we're definitely going to get married," to the sound of her "friends" clapping and cheering. We risk our honor by letting a magazine read our emails, our job applications and follow us all the way to our college graduation, or the bloody Marie Claire's piece on us after they met us on one of our qualifiers. If we fear
