The standard shape has straight edges and usually comes with a black outline, while the round shape includes a sphere and is typically gray. This guide will show you how to make adjustments to your Photoshop brushes so they look great on your photos and designs. First of all, select the appropriate brushes. The standard brushes are ideal for landscapes, buildings, or any other type of design. The round brushes are better for portraits or any other type of photo with a lot of subjects. Now go into the brush options by selecting Window > Brushes and adjust them to your liking. Start with adjusting the hardness and amount of the brush. The hardness is determined by how hard you want to draw with your brush or pen. The amount determines the size of the brush. The bigger the brush, the larger the area. This is also dependent on the amount of hardness. Next, select the size of the brush. For a general rule, the bigger the brush, the bigger the stroke. So if you want an incredibly skinny brush, then use the smallest setting. These sizes all refer to the pixel-size of the brush. Use your own judgment.
